

Deedee Corradini, president of Women's Ski Jumping USA since 2004 and former mayor of Salt Lake City, is Senior Vice President, Corporate Development, at Prudential Utah Real Estate. She is also an officer for the International Women's Forum and a Distinguished Senior Fellow in Urban Studies at The Richard W. Riley Institute of Government, Politics and Public Leadership at Furman University.

As mayor, Corradini was instrumental in bringing the 2002 Winter Olympic Games to Salt Lake City, and spent her eight years in office preparing the city to host the games. Corradini also served as President of the U. S. Conference of Mayors. She has had 16 years of public service experience, as well as 19 years of private sector experience. She has held a number of community service posts as well. Prior to becoming mayor of Salt Lake City, Corradini ran a government relations consulting firm, representing corporate interests in Washington, D.C.

Corradini holds undergraduate and graduate degrees from the University of Utah. She was born in Providence, Rhode Island, grew up in Lebanon and Syria for 11 years, and then lived on the east coast. Following service on the staffs of two Congressmen in Washington, D.C., she returned to Utah to raise her family.

As President of WSJ USA, she continues her campaign to get women ski jumpers into the Olympic Winter Games — ski jumping is the only event in the Olympic Winter Games that does not allow women.

She lives in Park City with her husband.
